My main interest lies in the morphology of the Myanmar language. I have been conducting research in the following topics in terms of linguistics: (1) affixation in the Myanmar language, (2) compounding in the Myanmar language, and (3) cliticization in the Myanmar language. Discriminating affixation, compounding and cliticization is sometimes fairly difficult in the study of the Myanmar language. One of the important purposes of my study is to recognize differences of these aspects in this language and to contribute to Myanmar linguistics. I will continue focusing on these topics this year. I am also planning to contrast the Myanmar morphology with that of Japanese, in order to make the most of living in Japan.
