Listening is assuming greater and greater importance in foreign language classroom (Nunan, 1997). It has been widely accepted that listening skill is overlooked in language classroom although it is considered the most used of the four skills of language. Listening comprehension has been viewed as a highly complex and active skill that facilitates learner acquisition of other language skills (Vandergrift, 1999). A number of scholars in language teaching have proposed ideas of teaching listening which focus on the process of student comprehension i.e. teaching students how to learn to listen through three steps of listening : pre-, while- and post listening. The designed teaching model focuses on listening instruction which facilitate students learning of listening comprehension. The model will be implemented with 15 Japanese students who enroll in the course "Thai 14: Listening 2" in semester 2, academic year 2018. The aim of the study is to investigate the implementation of the listening instruction. The effectiveness of the model will be evaluated using both quantitative and qualitative data.
