Fortunately my long-held wish to publish Middle Persian Historical Phonology is approaching its final stage. This year I will review the book once more and I will have it published if possible. This book is an attempt to describe the basic features of Middle Persian historical phonology and to present an almost full list of phonological changes from Old Persian to Middle Persian. It gives a general overview of the various sound laws, phonetic tendencies and isolated phonetic changes that have occurred in Middle Persian. For comparative purposes, cognate words in other languages have sometimes been given to provide additional evidence. This book is not only important for Iranian linguistics in particular, but also important for Indo-European linguistics in general.
