Iranian languages constitute one of the oldest branches of the Indo-European language family. Therefore, a historical study of the different aspects of these languages is not only important for Iranian linguistics in particular, but also important for Indo-European linguistics in general. This research project is a life-long project for me. In the past three years, I did a research on Middle Persian historical phonology whose outcome was published in the form of a book. This year I am going to go into the details of the invention of writing in the Ancient Near East and the Iranian Plateau. I will also study the gradual penetration of cuneiform writing into the Iranian Plateau. I will then discuss the way cuneiform was used by the inhabitants of the Iranian Plateau, esp. the Elamites and the Persians.
